Smith named to university diversity post

SCOTT STEWART

SENIOR STAFF WRITER / SYSTEMS MANAGER

Sonya Smith

A veteran administrator was hired to address diversity and equity issues in the University of Nebraska system.

Sonya Smith was appointed last Friday to the recently expanded role of associate to the president and assistant vice president of academic affairs for diversity by NU President James Milliken. Smith will coordinate university-wide efforts to assure diversity, fairness and equity on all the NU campuses.

"Dr. Smith has excellent, relevant experience at a number of institutions, and we are fortunate to have been able to attract her to the University of Nebraska," Milliken said in a statement.

Smith has doctorates in both education and law from Vanderbilt University, where she also served as associate dean of admissions during a two-year period of record-setting growth of female and minority enrollment.

"If the University of Nebraska has her now, lucky you," said Vickie Williams, See DIVERSITY POST: Page 2

State approves funding bill for NU

ANGI SADA

The Nebraska Unicameral approved a legislative bill authorizing an increase in funding to state colleges and universities.

Nebraska Governor Dave Heineman signed off on Legislative Bill 605 on April 11, ensuring that the University of Nebraska will have the finances for the Mead waste site clean up and to fund increasing utility costs.

According to a statement released by Chancellor Nancy Belck's office, this bill will also assist in the completion of library renovations.

"Over the next several years, LB 605 will enable UNO to renovate the original University Library structure to complement the addition currently under way," Belck said in a statement last week.

The Board of Regents approved the program statement and the university is waiting for approval from the Coordinating Commission for Post-Secondary Education, according to the statement.

Belck also said LB 605 will allow for infrastructure improvements including the replacement of major equipment like "chillers, boilers and high voltage electrical system switch components."

It will also provide for the clean up at the Mead site. The Mead site was established to hold and dispose of research waste that was generated by different NU programs at the UNMC and UNL campuses. Though it was built more than 40 years ago to meet the specifications in place at the time of its establishment, it no longer meets Environmental Protection Agency standards. David Lechner, NU vice president for business and finance, was quoted in a February Lincoln Journal Star report saying that the clean up costs in Mead would equal nearly $7 million. As EPA standards change, the figure may change also.

Belck's statement credited much of LB605's success to the work of NU President James B. Milliken. Milliken's office gave a "compelling presentation of the university's needs," she said.

Sen. Nancy Thompson of Papillion introduced the bill in January.

SHS offers mumps vaccinations

In response to the recent outbreak of mumps in the Midwest, Student Health Services will offer MMR vaccinations this week on campus.

Faculty and staff members between the ages of 23 and 49 who have not had two MMR vaccinations can visit SHS through Friday, April 21, from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and receive an MMR booster for $45. SHS is located on the first floor of the Milo Bail Student Center.

According to SHS staff, anyone older than 23 did not routinely receive a second MMR with a completed childhood immunization series. People older than 49 years of age are deemed to be immune due to having had the disease in early childhood.

If you are unsure of your immunity to mumps, a blood draw can be done for $35 at SHS to determine your immune status.

For more information, stop by SHS or call 554-2374.

UNO students to make global night commute April 29

Thousands of children in the war-torn country of Uganda must walk miles into town each night just to get a good night's sleep. These children face the threat of abduction into the rebel army if they remain in their homes.

More than 100 students from 29 organizations at UNO will be taking part in a "night commute" Saturday, April 29, to bring attention to the situation in Uganda in hopes of ending the devastation.

Individuals will gather at 5 p.m. at Creighton University in the parking lot near 30th and Cuming Streets. At 6 p.m., the group will begin its "commute" to the Omaha/Douglas Civic Center at 1819

Farnam St., where they will spend the night and participate in a variety of activities.

Omaha is one of more than 136 locations across the nation to host such an event in conjunction with Invisible Children Inc., a nonprofit organization established in 2004 that is committed to ending the war in northern Uganda where children are forced to fight as soldiers. Invisible Children was the result of a trip to Africa by three southern California filmmakers who documented their findings of children who are the weapons and the victims.

Pauline Mburu, a UNO student and organizer of the April 29 commute, said this event is very important because it helps shed light on an issue that many in the United States may not be aware of or consider a problem. Earlier this year, UNO students had the chance to view a film made by Invisible Children. After watching the presentation, Mburu said she was motivated to aid in the cause.

"I was moved to do something in hopes of dispelling the myth that the situation in Uganda is just 'the way Africa is,'" she said. "I was born and raised in Kenya, and I never saw or experienced what the children in Uganda are undergoing. I am demanding that the U.S. government help put an end to the longest-running war in Africa and one of the worst crises in the world today."

Those joining UNO in the commute include students from Creighton University and Lewis Central High School (Council Bluffs), as well as participants from First Christian Church and Christ Community Church, among others.

For more information about the April 29 commute or how to become involved, contact Pauline Mburu or Sharif Liwaru in the UNO Office of Student Organizations and Leadership Programs at 554-2711, or visit the Web at www.invisiblechildren.com.

administration assistant at Phoenix International School of Law in Scottsdale, Ariz., where Smith served briefly as associate dean of academic affairs last year.

Most recently, Smith served as the director of the GEAR UP program for the Tennessee Higher Education Commission. GEAR UP is a federally funded education program similar to Nebraska's P-16 (pre-school through college) Initiative, which Smith will be working with in her new position.

Denise Maybank previously held the role of associate to the president, said Sharon Stephan, assistant vice president of communications and marketing. Maybank left the university in the fall to become associate vice president for academic affairs at Michigan State University, Stephan said.

Since Maybank's resignation, the position has been expanded to include additional responsibilities for recruiting and retaining diverse students, faculty and staff, according to Milliken's statement. The role expansion causes the addition of the "assistant vice president of academic affairs for diversity" title to the position.

"It just reflected some additional responsibilities in terms of working with the campuses," Stephan said. "The responsibilities that were added fall more into the area of academic affairs than the office of the president."

One of the primary avenues for interaction between Smith and UNO will be her involvement with university-wide standing committees on gender equality and diversity, according to Sharon Ulmar, assistant to the chancellor for diversity and equal opportunity.

"My office will be working with her," Ulmar said. "We are not sure what the plan is. I can't say because they have changed the role a little bit."

Smith will officially begin her duties Monday, April 24.

Correction: In the April 18 edition of the Gateway, Kent Levine was mistakenly identified as a student at UNO. Levine is actually a staff member at UNO. Levine was quoted in the Safe Space Initiative story paraphrasing the remarks of participants in the April 12 Student Government public forum. The forum was held to discuss the possible establishment of an agency to serve the needs of the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and questioning community on campus.

Old school: Adults flock to degree programs

BY DEBBIE KELLEY
THE GAZETTE

Thirty-four-year-old Adria Lopour is living a dream.

And she has a prominent role in it.

So does her employer, Hewlett-Packard Co., where she manages 26 software-support engineers.

Rounding out the cast is Regis University's School for Professional Studies, where she's earning a master's of business administration focusing on international business.

"I realized I needed a degree to help expand my career," Lopour said. "This MBA will give me portable skills."

Lopour has been able to keep her full-time job, attend college and maintain a busy life that includes two daughters and various activities, because her employer and her school have made it less of a hassle for her to achieve her dream.

"The hours are convenient and the classroom is full of experienced adults in a career or making a career change," Lopour said. "It's definitely been worth it."

Postsecondary schools have learned that catering to working adults attracts a growing market segment nontraditional students, defined as ages 25 to 64, who want a degree for reasons that include earning more money, advancing professionally, experiencing personal growth or finishing a path they started years ago.

Students 25 years of age and older constitute nearly half of the new and returning student population, according to The Association for Nontraditional Students in Higher Education. And the number of students age 35 and older in degree-granting institutions has soared from about 823,000 in 1970 to an estimated 2.9 million in 2001, according to the National Center for Education Statistics.

The desire to make a lifestyle change is often a motivating factor for going back to school.

"This experience has made me realize that I want to continue my education with an advanced degree," said Chris Brewer, a 37-year-old Webmaster and systems analyst who will earn his bachelor's degree in business in May from the University of Colorado at Colorado Springs.

Penny Boggis, a technical-management undergraduate at DeVry University, didn't think she'd like going back to school after a 30-year hiatus.

"As a teenager, I didn't like school. I like it now, it's relevant to my life," said Boggis, a military-personnel flight superintendent at Schriever Air Force Base in Colorado.

Some employers are willing to help pay the bill. In 2001, 75 percent of employed adults ages 25 to 64 who participated in adult education received employer financial support, according to the National Center for Education Statistics. Support included payment or reimbursement for part of or all expenses, such as tuition, fees, books and time off for classes.

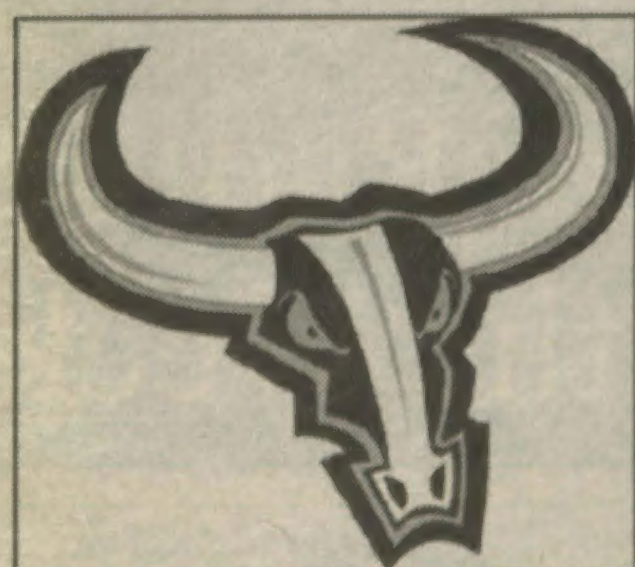

ChiefMasterSgt. Cari Kent, commandant of the Noncommissioned Officers Academy at Peterson Air Force Base, receives assistance through the military to attend the University of Phoenix. Earning a bachelor's in business management isn't about moving up the ranks for Kent; after 23 years of military service she's attained the highest rank she can.

"The degree adds credibility to what I do," she said, "and those credentials are important. What I'm learning at school mirrors what I'm teaching at work. It allows me to do my job better."

Schools make it as convenient as possible for nontraditional students to fit education into their schedules. Phil Maes, a 40-year-old Colorado Christian University student graduating in May with a bachelor's in human-resource management, said he appreciates the accelerated programs and flexible hours.

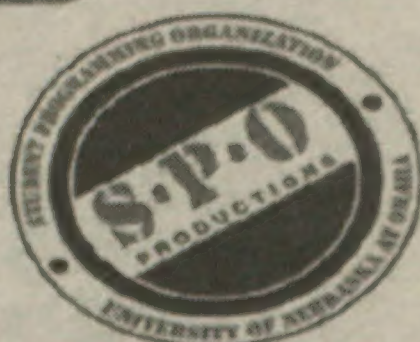

"Courses are completed in five weeks, and a lot of the homework and discussion is online," said Maes, who is retiring in six months from Air Force service.

Rumor Has It...

A look at what's in development--maybe

ANDREW CUMBEE
ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR

New movie, new theme song

As I sit here writing this new edition of Rumor Has It..., I'm listening to the newly leaked Mission: Impossible III theme that just got leaked to the Internet. Tom Cruise tries to get a new, current artist for each movie (U2 did the first, Limp Bizkit did the second). This one was done by Kanye West.

Well, as you might expect from that even more random and weird combination than Limp Bizkit, it's not good. In fact, I can't even see this playing in the actual movie. It's slow, it sounds like music from a Sega Genesis game and, I'm not sure, but I think at one point the teacher from the Charlie Brown movies talks in the background. It's not horrible, though. You can check it out on Yahoo's LAUNCHcast radio.

The Terminator does come back

Reports from multiple Australian newspapers are that The Terminator is on the way back to theaters soon. According to the producer, Andrew Vajna, he is set to start the next chapter in the series. He's said that filming would start early next year and the film would be out later that year.

The rumors about this are already starting to show up everywhere. They announced plans for a 4th and 5th film back when Rise of the Machines was released. With Schwarzenegger's term as governor of California up in 2007, it looks like they may have been waiting for him to make a return in the sequel. Some reports are that he would play the human soldier that the original Terminator model was based on. The movie will get a new cast as Nick Stahl who played John Connor in the T3 has confirmed that he won't be a part of it. It should still center on the Connor character, though. It's expected to take place many years after the events of T3.

Sounds pretty sweet so far. There is some bad news, though. It's being written by the guys that did Catwoman.

DC Comics taking over theaters

Just months before Superman Returns hits theaters, DC Comics, the oldest publisher of comic Warner Bros.

In the months before the release of Superman Returns, Warner Bros. is letting information on future projects slip.

books around and Marvel's main competition, is appearing all over in the film world.

The hype for Wonder Woman is getting to an insane level with polls on who should play the title character on nearly every film Web site, and articles about casting are appearing in nearly every film magazine. We should hear from the producers very soon now, as the film is still set to be released next year. Joss Whedon was set to do X-Men 3, but opted to write and direct WW instead. It's because of this that the field has been narrowed down to just a handful of candidates. While it sounds like the studio wants to put a bigger name like Jessica Biel, it's more likely that Whedon will go with an actress that he has used previously, based on how he works. I would expect Charisma Carpenter from "Buffy the Vampire Slayer" or Morena Baccarin from "Firefly" to step in. Personally, I think both are great choices, too.

Speaking of X-Men, the producers of those movies have been talking about doing Metal Men. Metal Men is a DC property that tells the stories of a ragtag team of superhero robots and their inventor who all face prejudice and fight evil.

Captain Marvel (the DC hero, not to be confused with Marvel Comics' Captain Marvel) is also coming to the screen in Shazam!, based on the comics. The story follows a young boy that turns into a superhero when he says the word "shazam." The movie just got a director after years of development. That director is Peter Segal, the guy behind Anger Management. Uhh... that sounds bad.

It's good to see that DC isn't rushing all of its huge properties to films right away. I like that they are releasing these less popular characters before we get to see The Flash and Green Lantern.

Quick Hits

Please, no more... Scary Movie 5, Joe Dirt 2 and Hostel 2 have all been given the go ahead.

Jean-Claude Van Damme will either step back out of obscurity or even deeper into it with his new movie where he plays himself. He gets involved in a bank robbery and the criminals don't know what to do when he doesn't kick the crap out of them.

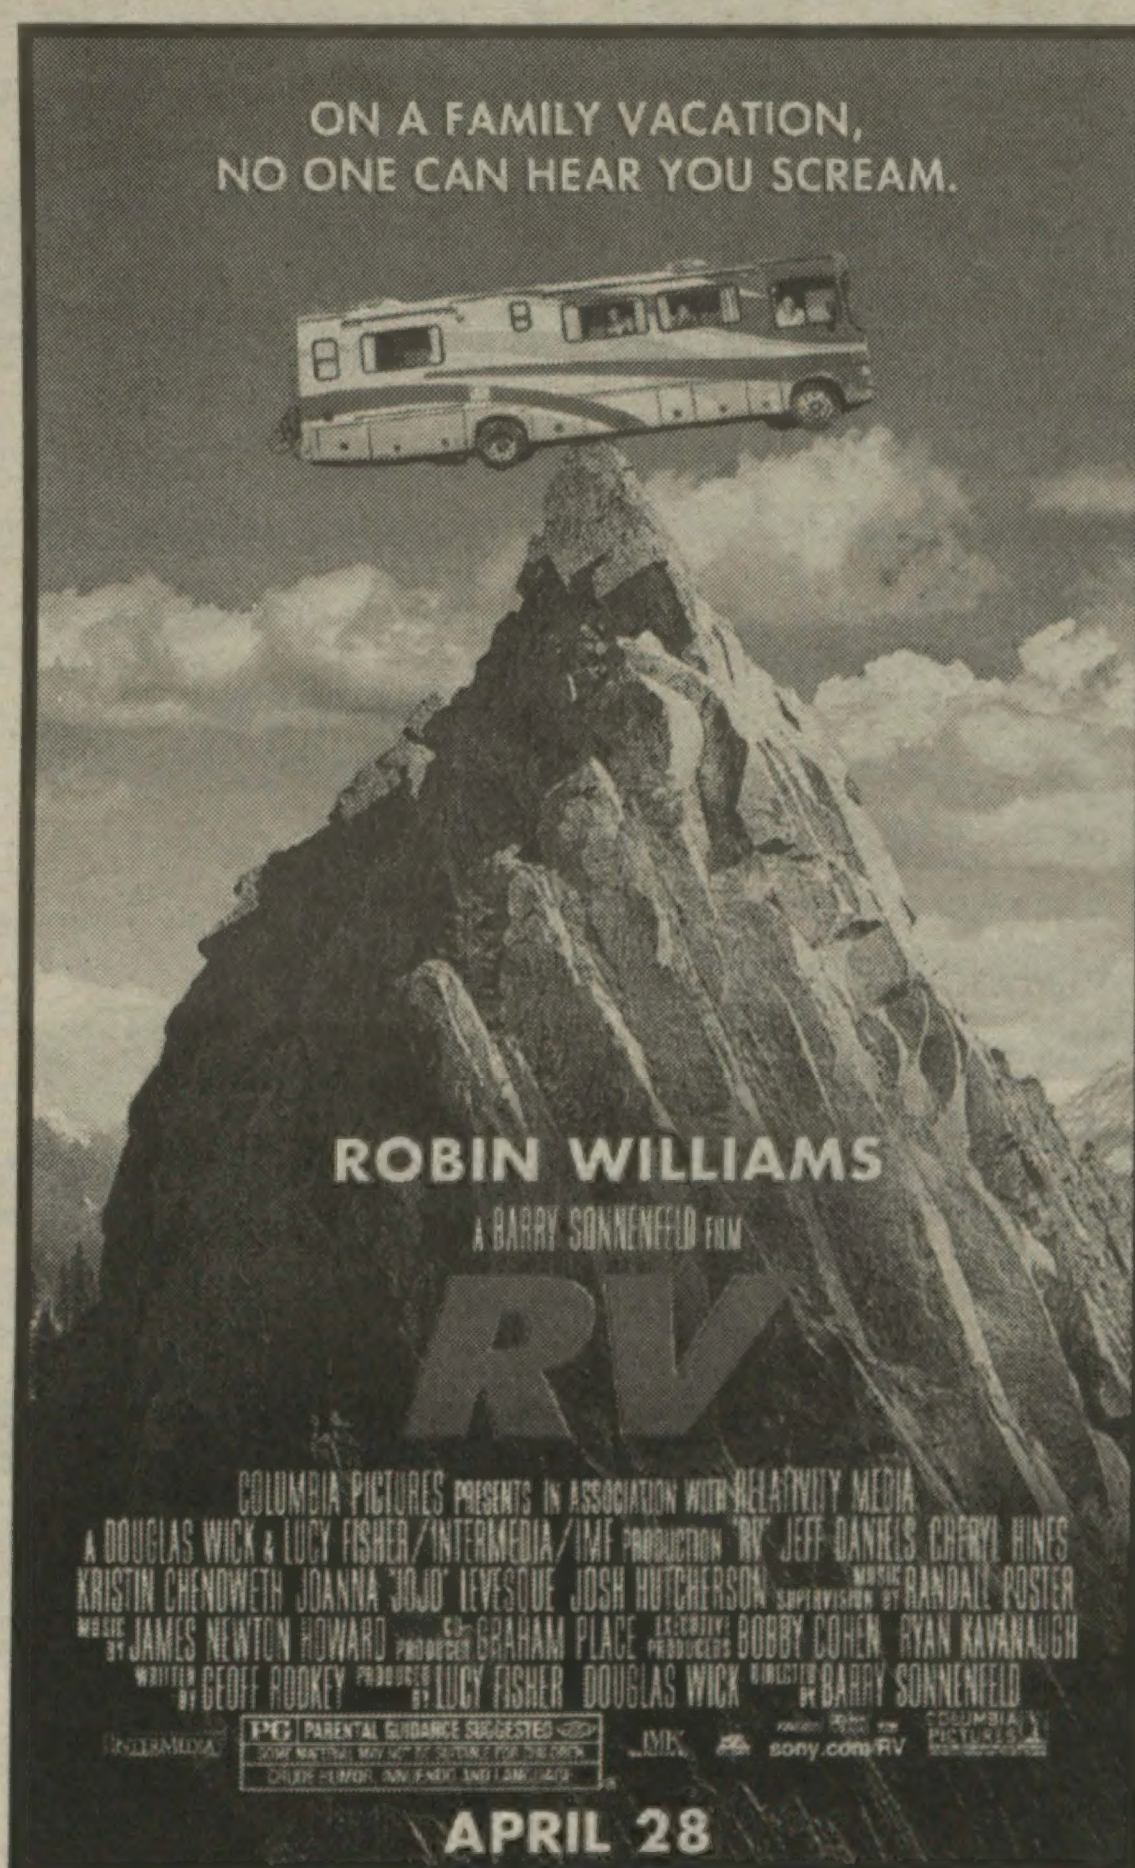

Robin Williams said in a recent interview that he wants to play the Joker in the next Batman movie. He should make RV 2 instead.

John Cusack and Samuel L. Jackson are going to star in the new Stephen King adapted 1408 about a scary hotel room. It sounds better than that lame summary, too.

Entering their 10th year as a band, Placebo has proven again and again that it has no equal in the music industry. Placebo is a trio of men who each have different sexual orientations, have legions of fans across an ever widening social spectrum and have been asked to play some of the most exclusive dates of any band anywhere. Quite simply, Placebo is one of those bands you either "get" or you do not. For those who have never heard of the band, however, or those that just don't remember what it is, here is a quick refresher:

Placebo is from Luxemburg, somewhere between Germany and Belgium in Europe, and released its first and self-titled album in 1996. However it was not until its 1998 release, Without You I'm Nothing, that the band hit it big with "Pure Morning," a hit in the United Kingdom, the United States, Australia and France. It was about this time that the band also attached "Every You and Every Me" from that same album to the Cruel Intentions soundtrack, which got it major exposure in the United States.

The band has been relatively quiet since, but put out its best charting UK album, Black Market Music, which many fans consider to be its best album. It also put out Sleeping With Ghosts, and a "greatest hits" disc called Once More with Feeling, which came out in 2004.

Meds, Placebo's first venture into the studio in three years, opens with a track that is the album's namesake. It's a fun track, but nowhere near as good as the following track, "Infra-Red," which is a bit of an upbeat song with lots of sound effects in the song bed. Lead singer Brian Molko's voice is on full display here, and is just amazing. In a nutshell, "Infra-Red" is the song that sounds most like classic Placebo, and for fans, that is as good a description as any. Next on the list of notable tracks is "Space Monkey," a song that is slow, industrial and dark. The best comparison to this song is to Placebo's previous hit "Pure Morning," but even that is fast-paced compared to this track. The song is actually more like a cross between the extremes of Stabbing Westward, Radiohead or Idiot Pilot...but that is most definitely a good thing.

"Post Blue" is next, and is one of the more upbeat and quite possibly the most addictive songs on the album. Heavy on the drums and most similar to "Protégé Moi" from Sleeping With Ghosts, it will almost certainly be a radio hit if the band ever decides to release it here in America.

Speaking of radio hits, the next two tracks, "Because I Want You" and "Song to Say Goodbye" are the only two singles released from this album so far. "Because I Want You" actually features a duet from R.E.M. singer Michael Stipe and is more like previous, mainstream Placebo.

"Song to Say Goodbye" is slower and more somber, but at the same time very powerful, much in the same mold of "Creep" from Radiohead or "The Only Way is the Wrong Way" from Filter. It is definitely a great way to end the album and should be a major hit on the radio.

Trying to pick out the best tracks of Placebo's latest album is really an exercise in futility because this is one of those albums you can play from cover to cover and back again. There is really nothing negative to say about Placebo's album. An important thing to remember is that Placebo is a band that is definitely an acquired taste.

If you are already a fan of Placebo, chances are you have already purchased the album. But if you are new to the band, this is a great album to test the waters with before delving into the elaborate and amazing world of Placebo.

Last ditch rally leads to baseball sweep

NATHAN LEETE
SPORTS EDITOR

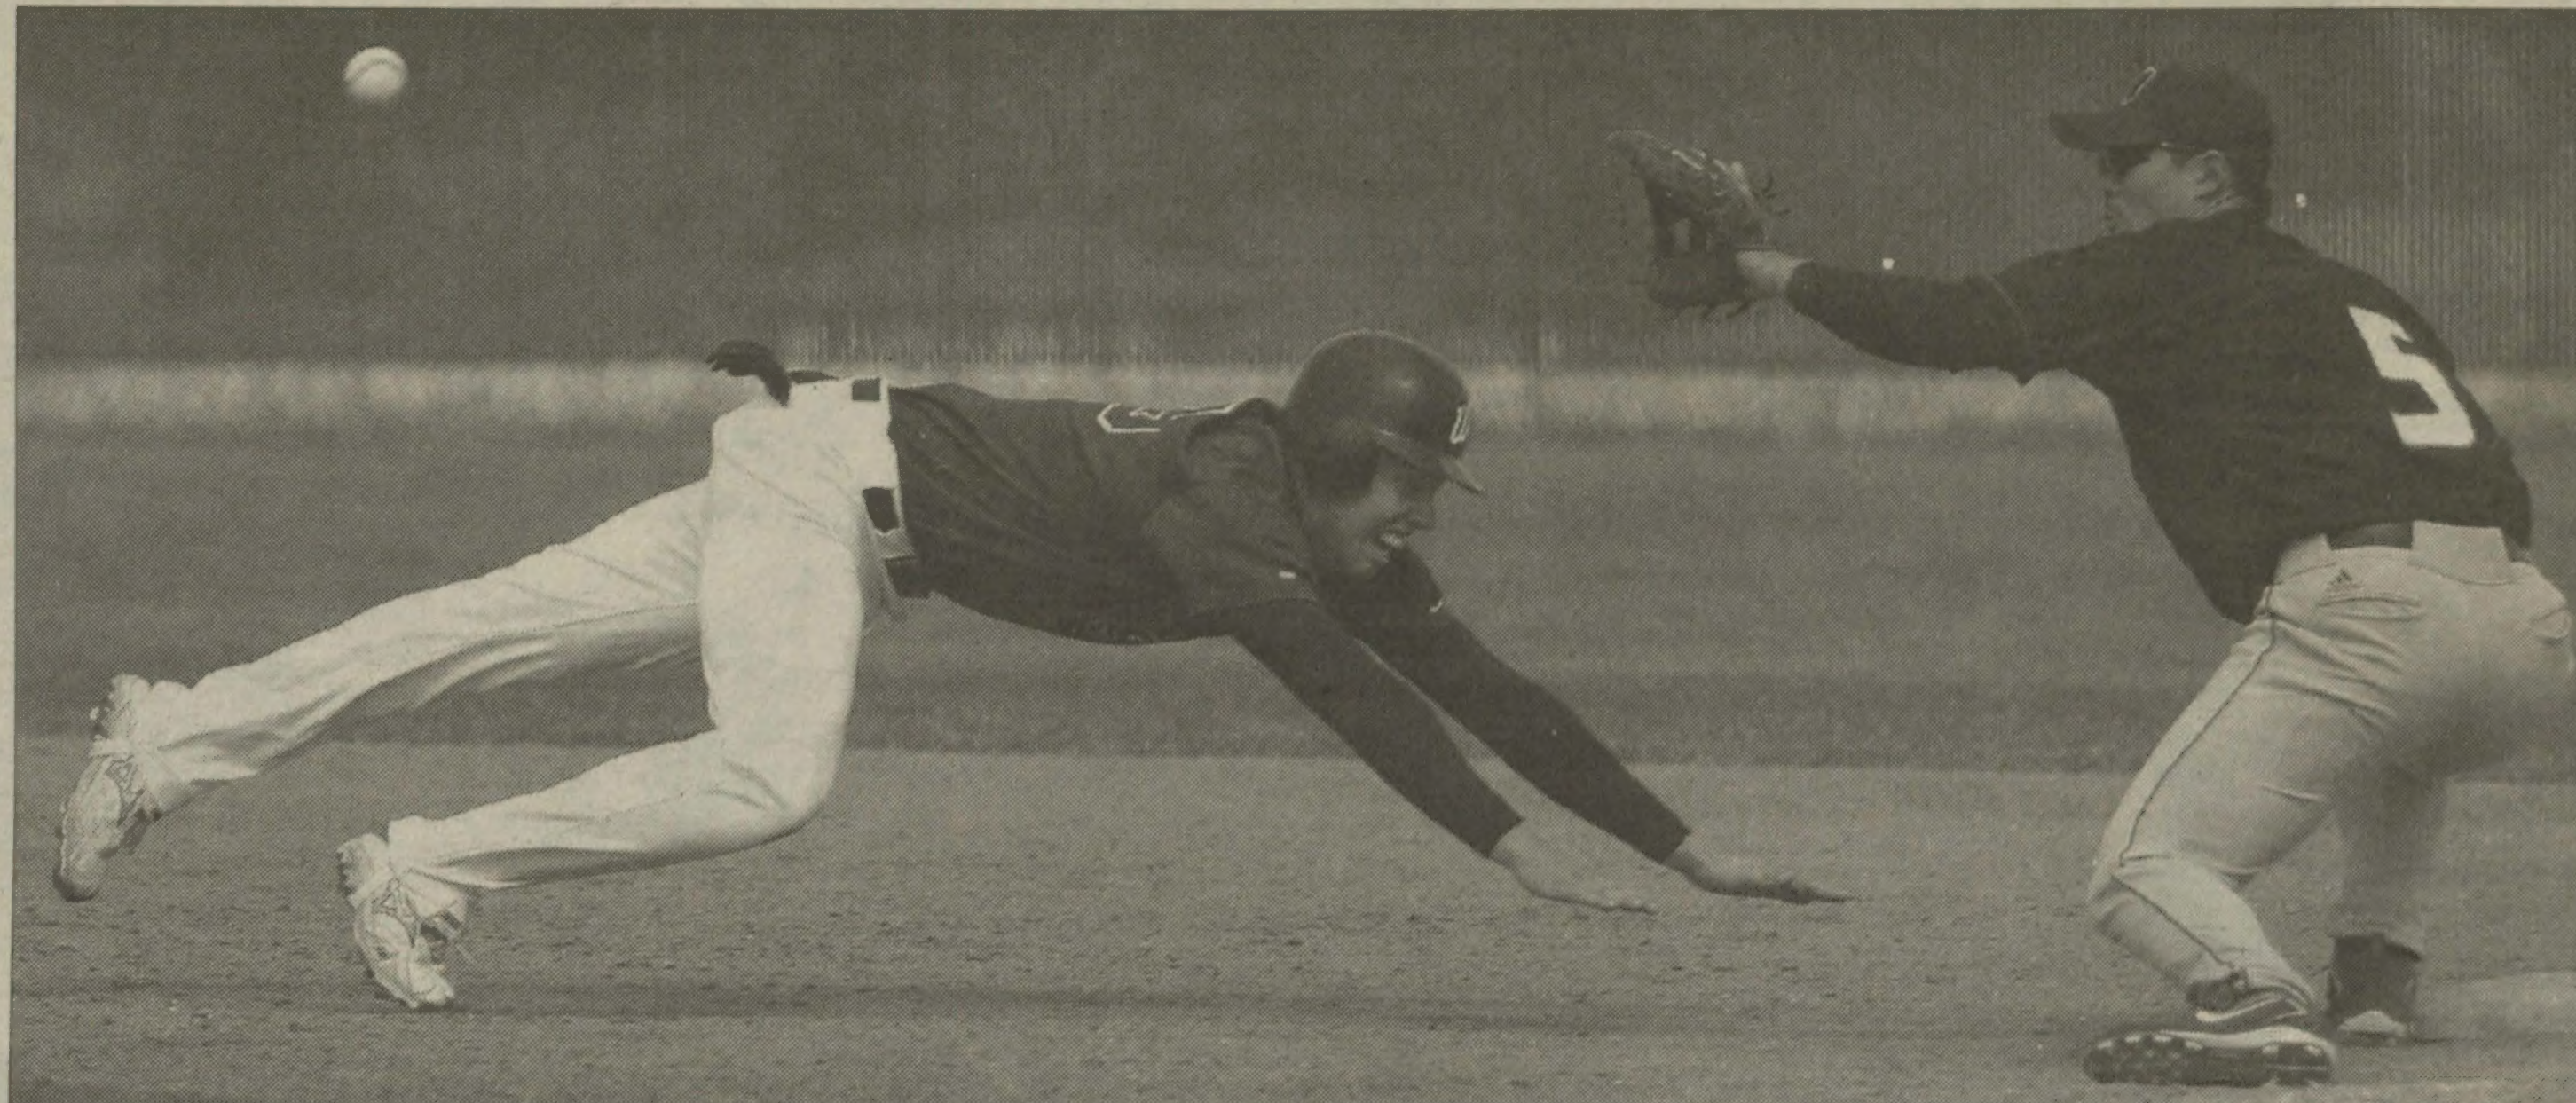

A last gasp effort in the first game of the UNO baseball team's Wednesday doubleheader saw the Mavericks post eight runs in the bottom of the seventh to get the win against Winona State.

After committing a season-high six errors, the Mavs faced a 7-0 deficit after two innings. Chad Leon put the Mavs on the board in the third with a solo shot out of right field. UNO caught a break in the fifth with two unearned runs, but was still down 10-3 at the end of sixth inning.

In the game's final at bat, UNO sent 12 batters to the plate. The first score of the inning came on a bases-loaded walk. The Mavs scored three runs before the first out of the inning. With two down, Derrick Kendrick tripled to center field and scored two runs to make the score 10-9.

Winona State feared another home run and intentionally walked Leon to put two Mavs on base, which set up Lyle Lafountain for an RBI single to tie the game. Brian Frew followed with an infield single, scoring Leon for the win.

First baseman Min Sung reaches for the pick-off throw as Winona State University's Tony Lubarsky dives back to the bag during the second game of Wednesday's doubleheader. Lubarsky was out on the play. The Mavs swept the Warriors 11-10 and 17-10.

In game two, UNO pounded out 15 hits for 17 runs. In the high scoring game, the Mavericks held a 10-7 lead after the first three innings.

Winona State tied the game in the top of the fourth, but the Mavericks answered with seven unanswered runs in their final three at bats to win 17-10.

Lafountain was 3-for-5 with two homers and five RBIs to lead UNO's high-octane offense. Frew followed with four hits and three RBIs.

Track uses Nebraska invite as prep

The UNO women's track team claimed 10 top-four finishes in the Nebraska Invitational, despite a nearly two-hour delay caused by mid-afternoon thunderstorms last weekend.

The Mavericks won three individual titles even though Coach Tim Hendricks decided to mix things up last weekend.

"We are going to experiment by putting people in events they don't normally compete in," Hendricks said in an interview last week.

Laverne Monger won the 200-meter dash with a time of 24.26 seconds and teammate Molly Belling came in third with a time of 24.74. Belling also claimed the title in the 100-meter dash with lightning speed, clocking in at 11.49. UNO's national indoor long jump champion, Foluso Makinde, once again claimed the long jump with a leap of 19 feet, 7 1/2 inches.

Three Mavs placed in the top 10 in the triple jump, Debbie Akerly claimed fourth in the triple jump with a 37-00.50 jump, Ashley Yates leaped to a seventh place finish and Kelly Hollmann to an eighth place finish.

Representing the distance runners for the Mavericks, Kelli Ryan placed third in the 5,000-meter run with a time of 18:05.

Seniors say goodbye to home in style

For the last time in their collegiate softball careers, UNO seniors Katie Novotny, Lauren McArthur and Shilo Jorgensen played at Claussen-Westgate Field.

The three seniors strung together six RBIs to sweep North Central Conference competitor Minnesota State-Mankato 3-2 and 7-1 Tuesday.

UNO moved to 37-9 overall, padding its 7-1 first-place standing in the NCC.

UNO grabbed a 1-0 lead in the second inning of the opener as Brooke Wagner scored McArthur. MSU stole the lead in the top of the fourth when Ashley Jay crushed a two-run homer.

In the bottom of the fourth, Novotny drilled a two-run RBI double to center.

Cheris Kuster turned on the heat by knocking off nine of the next 10 batters to earn the win. The win improves her record to 13-3.

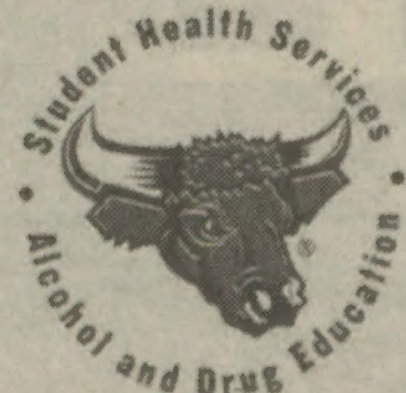

In the second game of the twin bill, the Mavericks came out with their bats loaded. Jorgensen shattered a three-run homer in the first inning and the Mavs shot to a 4-0 lead.

Sara Sortino hit through a hole for a single in the second and later scored on a wild pitch for a 5-0 lead.
